Dear Bill:

It is my honor and privilege to write you about a most important program which will benefit many young leaders of our nation -- the Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship Awards Dinner.

This program was established to assist young people who are interested in entering public life and who share Senator Goldwater's philosophy of government. The project is organized under the sponsorship of The Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund.

The Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship Awards assist deserving students who have shown an interest in entering public life. These scholarships enable high school and college students to attend special seminars, conferences, and institutes sponsored by The Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund. The awards focus on students who have shown leadership qualities, and are actively interested in utilizing their talents in helping to determine the future direction of our country. Most are majoring in political science, government, economics, and/or journalism in college.

On October 24th a special and unique Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship Awards Dinner will be held at the new J.W. Marriott Hotel in Washington, D.C. I am pleased to have been asked to serve as the Chairman of this dinner which will fund The Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship Awards.

I would be honored, as would Senator Goldwater, if you would agree to serve as an Honorary Chairman for this very important dinner. As an Honorary Chairman, your name would be listed on the dinner's invitation and program. The dinner is a bi-partisan, non-political event and your participation in honoring Senator Goldwater will be most appreciated.

At your earliest convenience please call Susan Johnston at 202/546-3392 to let her know your decision. Susan will be coordinating the dinner activities, and she will be happy to answer your questions regarding the event.

I am looking forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

John Warner

THE CHARLES EDISON MEMORIAL YOUTH FUND

President Ronald Reagan:

"We've neglected to teach economics in our schools and a whole generation of our sons and daughters are growing up with little understanding of how our system works. And that is what the Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund is working so diligently to correct. ... There has never been a time when the need for an informed citizenry is greater. That is what the Edison Fund is all about."

For Tomorrow's Leaders

In the past 12 years over 1,500 young men and women have participated in the Edison Fund's unique training programs. Some graduates already occupy sensitive positions in national and local government, business and media. Will an Edison Fund alumnus one day sit in the Oval Office? Frankly, we expect so.

The Edison Programs

The Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems

Designed to give firsthand experience of the United States government at work, one graduate writes of the Institute: "It has greatly increased my pride in this country because I have learned so much of what makes it great." There is no other opportunity like it in the world, except of course for the federally funded White House Fellows program. Each student serves as an intern in the office of one of the branches of the United States government or with organizations that work routinely with the highest levels of the government. Under the direction of Georgetown University's Dr. Lev E. Dobriansky, the Institute has built a reputation for excellency in the nation's capital that led former President Ford to comment, "I know firsthand what a fine job these young people do from my own experience of hosting the Institute's summer interns."

The American Foreign Policy Forum

More important than ever in a time when, as President Reagan himself admits, the Soviet Union has "a window of opportunity" for expansion, this part of the Institute's program addresses a wide variety of issues—without limiting itself to the Soviet threat, nor to that perspective alone. The Forum invites dignitaries of foreign governments, Congress, business and our own diplomatic corps for discussion—and often intense question and answer sessions—so that our students, future leaders themselves, can acquire the proper sophistication essential for prudent decision making.

Seminars in Support of Private Enterprise

There is a need in America for rapprochement, indeed cooperation, between business and academia. President Reagan has said: "We've neglected to teach economics in our schools ... and this is what the Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund is working so diligently to correct." Our series of regional, on-campus seminars involving business leaders, faculty and students, encourages a deeper understanding of America's free enterprise system. The seminars evolved from a series of smaller pilot seminars in cooperation with such universities as Rice, DePauw, University of Texas at Austin, and Vanderbilt. For widest possible dissemination, including perhaps for broadcasting on the Public Television Network, our Spring 1980 Seminar at the University of Texas was videotaped.

Conferences on Responsible Journalism

"The Press is the Fourth Estate of the realm," wrote Carlyle. His words ring ever so true. Recent surveys show a deepening cynicism about the news media. The Edison Fund devotes much of our efforts to these regional Conferences, where only the most respected journalists of every political persuasion reinforce this time-honored principle: First Amendment freedoms depend upon ethical standards and an unbiased treatment of the news.

"The basic ingredient of my advice is a resurrection of honor. Honor, an old-fashioned word, but one that encompasses everything—duty, responsibility, knowledge, and adherence to one's heritage and traditions, respect for the eternal values. An honorable man can live a life free from fear. He knows his duties to his family, his community and his nation, and will exercise them to the best of his ability. He is aware of his responsibilities—first to himself and then to the world around him. He takes the trouble to learn his background—his family, his nation and his God—and uses this knowledge to enrich his own life and the life of all around him."

—Charles Edison to America's youth

"The Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund was established in 1969 for the purpose of educating young American leaders in the concepts, principles, and institutions which have made the United States of America the strongest and most prosperous nation in the world. The idea was formed in 1967 when Charles Edison met with a group of individuals who wanted to strengthen support for the country's government and private enterprise system within the leadership circles of our society."

With the help of concerned individuals, business and industry, private foundations, and academic institutions, the Edison Fund has been able to provide a unique and important resource for outstanding young Americans. Now, with another decade before us, and an ever-present need to encourage understanding of our economic and political values, the Edison Fund is seeking increased support from the private sector to assist the young people who will be taking over in guiding the course of our nation."

—David R. Jones President

America's Leaders Praise the Edison Fund

Former President Gerald Ford: From my own past experience of hosting the Institute's summer interns in my Congressional office, I know firsthand what a fine job these young people do.

Senator Paul Laxalt: It's sometimes difficult today to find a foundation that will direct your contribution to actual programs. Yet, I have been working with one that does exactly that. It applies all of its funds to programs which benefit our young people by teaching them what's right with our country. The program is the Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems at Georgetown University, sponsored by the Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund....The Institute doesn't receive mammoth grants from any foundations, and it has never asked for, nor received, a dime from Uncle Sam. It exists solely from the support you and others give it each year.

Congressman Jack Kemp: I know of no other organization which is having the positive impact upon the future of our country as is the Edison Fund....I am impressed with the quality of the Edison Fund's program, and its ability to instill in America's future leaders a belief in, and understanding of, our free-enterprise and constitutional systems.

Senator Barry Goldwater: I made a rule a long time ago not to become associated with any organization or program, unless I knew I could be deeply involved in it. The Edison Fund is just such a project. I came to know the Edison Fund's hard working President, Dave Jones, back in the early '60s when he was leading the Young Americans for Freedom and I was running for President. The Honorary Chairman is my close friend, Dr. Walter Judd, with whom I served in Congress for many years. I can assure you, the Edison Fund is succeeding in reaching our young people.

Undersecretary of State James Buckley: The Institutes have graduated over 1,000 students who, because of their participation in this unique program, have a better understanding of, and appreciation for, our systems of constitutional government and free enterprise. During my years in Washington, I met many of these students, and I know of no program that has done more for its participants than the Edison Fund's Institute.

A Few of Our Distinguished Alumni

Bruce Gregory Dew attended the 1972 Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems. He holds a B.A. and J.D. degree from the University of South Carolina. Bruce has been a Judge of the Fifth District, Lexington County, South Carolina; Special Assistant to the Director of the C.I.A. (under Stansfield Turner and William J. Casey) Legislative Counsel Division; a White House Fellow; and is currently Director of the Division of Public Safety Programs, Office of the Governor of South Carolina.

Deborah McMahon attended the 1973 Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems. She graduated from St. Xavier College where her academic status continually placed her on the Dean's List. She worked for Congressman Edward J. Derwinski in whose office she interned during the 1973 Edison Fund Institute, and is now in Vice President Bush's Office for Congressional Relations.

Mary Caslin received an Edison Fund scholarship to the 1972 Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems and the 1973 Journalism Conference in New York City. A graduate of St. John's University in New York, Mary majored in Government and Politics. Miss Caslin was employed by Interbank Card Association in New York City. She has been selected as an "Outstanding Young Woman of America," and is now Director of Development for the International Center for the Disabled.

Louis March received a scholarship to attend the 1975 Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems. He holds a B.A. degree from Old Dominion University. Following graduation Louis returned to Washington and now serves as Special Assistant to Senator Jesse Helms.

Claire C. McCaskill is now Assistant Prosecuting Attorney of Jackson County, Missouri. The 1975 graduate of the University of Missouri at Columbia, with a B.S. in political science, earned her law degree from the same institution in 1977.

Grace Guerrieri McKnight is working in Oakbrook, Ill., as a Regional Research Associate for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Grace graduated in 1976 from Mt. Mary College with a B.A. in history and political science. Her institute internship with the Chamber led to her present position. Insights into the Chamber's Washington functions, afforded by that internship, have proved advantageous, she writes the Edison Fund.

Goldwater Scholarship Awards Dinner HUNDREDS PAY TRIBUTE TO SEN. BARRY GOLDWATER

The Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship Awards Dinner is not only a tribute to a great and courageous man, it is a means through which many young people are enabled to better understand and appreciate the unique opportunities and responsibilities each of us has as a free citizen of the United States. Since its inception in 1975, this bi-ennial event has enabled sixty-seven students to attend the Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems and has provided assistance for countless others to attend The Fund's journalism and private enterprise conferences.

The fifth Goldwater Scholarship Awards Dinner was held in the Grand Ballroom of the Sheraton Washington Hotel on the evening of Wednesday, November 2. Over 700 individuals of diverse points of view attended the bipartisan event. The evening was memorable. Senator John Warner welcomed guests to the evening's festivities. Ms. Tina Barsh, AT&T Communications and 1976 Goldwater Scholar, offered the invocation followed by The Honorable Mark R. Levin, Deputy Assistant Secretary of Education and 1976 Goldwater Scholar, with the pledge of allegiance.

Following dinner, Mr. David R. Jones, President of The Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund, spoke on the importance of the Barry Goldwater Scholarship Awards program. Senator Paul Laxalt, Honorary Dinner Chairman, gave the evening's principal address followed by Senator Goldwater's stirring response. The program concluded with a moving concert by famed pianist, Roger Williams.

The program's success was ensured by the hard work of many dedicated individuals. Senator Laxalt's Chairmanship was bolstered by Co-Chairmen Senator Sam Nunn and Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole. Honorary Chairmen attending the dinner included Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, CIA Director William Casey, Federal Communications Commissioner Mimi Weyforth Dawson, James B. Edwards, President, Medical University of South Carolina, Republican National Committee Chairman Frank Fahrenkopf, Jr., former President Gerald R. Ford, Energy Secretary Don Hodel, Agency for International Development Administrator M. Peter McPherson, Admiral Thomas H. Moorer, U.S.N. (Ret.), U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation Chairman Edward E. Noble, Housing and Urban Development Secretary Samuel R. Pierce, Jr., Lt. Gen. William W. Quinn (Ret.), and former U.S. Congressman John Rhodes.

A special thanks must be extended to Dinner Chairman Don V. Cogman, Vice President of Government Affairs for MAPCO Inc. and member of The Fund's Board of Directors; the members of the Goldwater Dinner Committee, a group of sixty-eight individuals prominent in the Washington community; and Ms. Susan Johnston, of Precision Targeting, Inc., dinner consultant.

The Dinner Sponsors merit particular recognition, for it is they who, by purchasing tickets for tables to the dinner, make the Goldwater Scholarship

1983 AMERICAN POLITICAL

One of the principal elements in making a student conference successful is the attitude of its participants. The level of enthusiasm exhibited by the students of the 1983 American Political Journalism Conference guaranteed the program's success.

"The caliber and intensity of the students were extremely impressive," observed Conference Chairman, Arnold Steinberg, a California based media specialist and member of The Edison Fund's Board of Directors. "Their repeated expressions of appreciation to The Edison Fund for holding this conference reinforced the belief that this program is an extremely worthwhile endeavor of lasting significance to all involved."

Seventy-eight students representing thirty-three states participated in The Edison Fund's Washington, D.C. conference on October 28-30. The conference, one of The Fund's finest in many respects, left a beneficial and lasting impact upon a great number of tomorrow's journalists. Barry Rose, a student from Western Kentucky University writes, "Thank you very much for the opportunity to attend the 1983 American Political Journalism Conference. I thought more about my political beliefs during those three days than I had ever before."

Students were selected from colleges and universities across the nation on the basis of potential for having a major impact on communications and journalism in the future, as well as interest and motivation based on academic achievement and extracurricular activities. Students were recruited through contact with journalism professors and deans and the students themselves.

The Conference's opening session featured Lee Edwards, Lee Edwards and Associates; Robert Merry, Wall Street Journal; Pat Derian, columnist; David Hoffman, Washington Post; and Fred Barnes, Baltimore Sun in a discussion on Covering Politics in Washington. Kenneth Tomlinson, Director of Voice of America, gave an enlightening presentation at the evening's opening banquet session. Mr. Tomlinson discussed the necessity of Voice of America broadcasts to totalitarian and third world countries where media access is severely restricted. He stressed the Voice's commitment to honesty in its reporting, pointing out that VOA is the only media establishment required by law to be objective, comprehensive and representative of American institutions.

The Saturday morning session, The Making of a Political Issue, was moderated by Ken Thompson, Press Secretary for Senator Steven D. Symms, and included panelists Tony Dolan, Chief Speechwriter for President Reagan; Lisa Myers, NBC News; Grace-Marie Arnett, formerly, Copley News Service; Robert Lichter, Professor, George Washington University; and Vernon Guidry, Baltimore Sun. They felt that the press' ability to influence or create political issues in the short-run is grossly overexaggerated. They agreed the press cannot make a political issue unless there is some public interest, some concern, and some substance to it, however, because the media helps shape public interest and concern, the long-run influence can be significant.

John Quinn, Editor, USA TODAY, was one of the most popular conference speakers. His discussion on the explosion in the communications industry alerted students to the opportunities, challenges, and most importantly, responsibilities they will confront as future journalists to shape the forms of communication so that they serve the public and not the interests or egos of those in the media.

Ambassador Ernesto Rivas-Gallont of El Salvador was the principal speaker in a panel discussion of American Media Coverage of Central America. The Ambassador expressed a great deal of admiration for the United States press, however, his message was straightforward.

John Quinn, Editor of USA TODAY, remained long after his presentation for in-depth discussion with students.

ward: "Coverage of the events in Central America, and events in El Salvador in particular, have been and continue to be biased." Following Ambassador Rivas-Gallont's presentation, Lynn Bouchey, President, Council for Inter-American Security; Kathleen Bertelsen, Legislative Assistant to Representative Sam Gejdenson; and Peter Jones, Washington Times shared their comments on the topic.

Syndicated columnist Donald Lambro showed the students a one hour television documentary he co-wrote and narrated, titled "Star Spangled Spenders" about the growth and cost of the federal government. Following the film, Mr. Lambro addressed the topic Investigative Reporting.

The conference's final session, moderated by Christopher J. Matthews, Administrative Assistant to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, brought together the press secretaries of five of the 1984 presidential candidates for a discussion of Presidential Campaign Coverage.

Students from the University of North Carolina, Louisiana State University, University of California, Vanderbilt University, DePauw University, Ohio State University, Indiana University, and many others attended the conference. The students were exceptional. Their demeanor was professional, their questions challenging, and their attitude zealous. While each holds some position with his/her campus newspaper, over thirty participants are currently editors.

They were diverse both in their backgrounds and their individual career goals. Among the participants were aspiring national network anchors, cable television executives, and small town newspaper reporters.

Each of the 1983 conference participants was awarded a scholarship to cover the costs of meals, housing, and the conference fee. The Fund would like to extend its gratitude to the Gannet Foundation, the McCay Foundation, Mr. Henry Salvatori, and the many individuals who contributed general support and scholarship funds to the program.

The October conference was the eighth journalism conference sponsored by The Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund. Plans are underway for a ninth conference to be held in the fall of 1984. Interested persons should contact The Edison Fund office (see page 8) for further information.

Kenneth Tomlinson, Director,
Voice of America

"When I return to Davis the four papers which want to interview me regarding the conference will meet an individual who was part of a tremendous experience in the American Political Journalism Conference. To all who were involved in putting on this invaluable experience, to those who saw fit to invite me, and to all the members of the conference that made these few days so special and memorable, my most sincere thanks."

Richard Mersereau
University of California, Davis

"I was very impressed with the agenda and thankful for the format in which it was presented. I felt that the panel discussions allowed us, the delegates, the freedom to look at a topic from many different perspectives. The conference is a terrific program."

Holly Rust
Vanderbilt University

"As you may have guessed, the exposing of bias in the media was my favorite part of the conference. It was all good, but liberalism in our media has always been something I intuitively knew existed, but never was something I had been able to put my finger on. Let's hope we can teach the American people how to put their finger's — all five of them — on it as well."

Michael D. Wade
Washington State University

1983 INSTITUTE ON COMPARATIVE

Dr. Paul Craig Roberts gave the 1983 Institute's principal commencement address. The Fund's professor of comparative economics at the 1972 Institute, Dr. Roberts holds the William E. Simon Chair in Political Economics at Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies.

Mr. David R. Jones, President of The Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund, bids students farewell as Georgetown University Associate Dean Gerald Sullivan and Dr. Paul Craig Roberts look on. Mr. Jones is Chairman of the National Commission on Student Financial Assistance and a member of the faculty at Vanderbilt University.

Commencement exercises for the 14th annual Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems were held in the auditorium of Gaston Hall on the Georgetown University campus. Institute Director, Dr. George Veksnins served as the evening's Master of Ceremonies. Dr. Paul Craig Roberts gave the principal address followed by remarks from Dean Michael Collins and Edison Fund President, David Jones. At right, Dean Gerald Sullivan summons students to the stage for the presentation of diplomas. In the foreground, Institute professor of political science, Dr. Karl Cerny, congratulates John Guldaman, a senior at the University of Colorado, on his successful completion of the Institute.

1983 INSTITUTE COMMENCEMENT MEMORABLE

Saturday, July 16th marked the commencement of The Fund's 14th annual Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems. Following six weeks of intensive study, demanding internships, and enlightening lectures, the 110 students of the 1983 Institute departed Georgetown in pursuit of careers in government, business, law, and journalism. The Institute commencement program was memorable. The following are excerpts from two of the graduation addresses.

Dr. Michael Collins, Dean, Georgetown University School for Summer and Continuing Education, left the students with these words:

"You are leaving Georgetown University tonight, and I would like you to take from Georgetown what we want all our students to have: compassion for those who suffer, a craving for justice, a desire to serve. That is the dream Georgetown dreams for all its students; that is the dream I have for you tonight. You are talented, gifted, intelligent men and women. You will no doubt 'go far in this world' and take on positions of leadership, influence, and power. I want you to remember that the American dream is a corporate dream and that you must use your gifts and talents and intelligence, and whatever influence and power you come by, for the good of others, to make better the world in which all of us must live."

"Graduation is a time for wishes, a time for dreams, and I have a wish for you tonight. I don't wish you a perfect life because that would be silly and waste a wish: no life is perfect. I do wish for you a life that from time to time you will step back from and say is a good life, because it is a life through which some good has been done."

Dr. Paul Craig Roberts, of Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies, gave the Institute's principal commencement address. The following is taken from his speech on "Reaganomics: An Outlook."

"The greatest single threat to the economy comes from how badly informed people are about economic policy. Pundits are declaring Reaganomics a failure, but in truth Reagan's supply-side policy of economic growth was abandoned, first by the Federal Reserve in 1981 when it followed a recessionary monetary policy and second by the administration itself in 1982 when it reversed the direction of its tax policy and raised taxes in a recession. If you will remember, David Stockman promised that the 1982 tax increase would reduce the budget deficits by $100 billion over a three-year period. Instead, the deficits widened by an enormous sum. What is failing is the traditional Republican policy of trying to balance the budget with higher taxes. William E. Simon once observed that as soon as a President is elected, he is captured by the past. Ronald Reagan has now been captured in turn. He protests, but his government does not hear him."

Institute students spend their afternoons interning in the offices of Senators, Congressmen, Ambassadors, and executive agencies. Jim Ferguson, a senior from the University of Arizona, was delighted with his internship with Senator Barry Goldwater.

Following six weeks of hard work, students are ready to celebrate completion of the Institute. The Potomac boat cruise, one of many graduation/reunion weekend activities, presented a perfect opportunity. Above, students and alumni board "the Ambassador" for a cruise to Mt. Vernon.

Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick's address on "American Foreign Policy" was a highlight of the summer Institute. "I think the U.N. is an important body. It is worthy of our best attention. What happens there matters, in some ways that are not often understood either. It matters in long run ways rather than in the short run. What happens in the U.N. shapes attitudes in cumulative ways. . . . It shapes agendas, foci of world attention and assumptions about what is and is not possible in what is euphemistically called there the community of nations." A reception and luncheon following her speech allowed students the opportunity for personal discussion of current policy issues with the Ambassador.

Campuses and 37 States Attend

JOHN ENGALITCHEFF: A Commitment to Tomorrow

The same beliefs which inspired John Engalitcheff's support of American principles and institutions have inspired young people for generations. Forced to flee his homeland during the Russian Revolution, John Engalitcheff, Jr. entered this country penniless and without the luxury of speaking English. Within three years, however, he graduated from Johns Hopkins Engineering School, and proceeded to fulfill the "American Dream."

Inspired by his commitment to this nation, The Edison Fund honors young leaders each year through the John Engalitcheff Outstanding Young American Award. The award is presented to outstanding students attending the Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems at Georgetown University. This summer, Steven J. Mintz, Iman Anabtawi, and David Deeter were selected as Engalitcheff Outstanding Young Americans.

Steven Mintz is a junior at Princeton University where he studies politics and European culture. He holds a 3.85 grade-point-average and is fluent in Spanish and French. A scholarship grant from the F.M. Kirby Foundation enabled this outstanding student to attend the 1983 Institute.

Iman Anabtawi is also a deserving recipient of the John Engalitcheff Award. Iman is a senior at Pomona College in Claremont, California where she studies economics and international relations. A recipient of the coveted Truman Scholarship, Iman hopes to run for elected office after earning a Ph.D. in economics and international law.

David Deeter is a senior at Manchester College in Indiana where he holds a 3.99 grade-point-average. Majoring in political science, German, and computer science, David plans to obtain a Ph.D. in international relations and become a university professor. An Irl Marshall scholarship enabled David to attend this summer's Institute.

Since 1975, twenty-five outstanding students have received the John Engalitcheff Award. These award certificates, presented at graduation, are no doubt proudly displayed in each student's home.

When Pearl Harbor was bombed in 1941, John Engalitcheff locked the doors of his very successful and still growing company, and joined the Navy in order to serve his adopted country. Through its educational programs, The Edison Fund seeks to instill within young people this same dedication to principle and to country.

The John Engalitcheff Award is a tribute not only to its namesake, but also to the promise each of its winners holds for the future. As this year's Award winners move forward, we expect great results from their renewed faith in this nation and its principles.

SPOTLIGHT

DONOR

The directors of Hughes Aircraft Company believe that individual integrity is vital to the well being of the company and know what incentives mean to improving the living standard of this country. The company's commitment to this belief is apparent not only in its policies toward employees, but also by its support of numerous educational and health organizations.

Through the participation of Dr. Allen E. Puckett, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, and Mr. John L. Winkel, Senior Vice President, the Company has been a long time supporter of The Edison Fund's Goldwater Scholarship program. The company has both served as a Dinner Sponsor and been represented on the Dinner Committee, by Mr. John Winkel, for each of the five Goldwater Scholarship Awards Dinners since 1975. The Edison Fund is grateful to Hughes Aircraft Company for its continuing commitment to this important program.

Hughes Aircraft Company, founded by the late industrialist Howard R. Hughes, has for three decades specialized in high technology electronics for military, scientific and commercial use. Products range from air defense systems to radar-based avionics, from missiles to space satellites, from communications systems to complex displays, and from optics to microelectronics. Although the Company's name still reflects the fact that it had been engaged in aircraft design and manufacture, it is no longer involved in that activity.

The Company is one of the nation's largest defense contractors with sales totaling $4.4 billion in 1982, and is the largest industrial employer in California with 68,000 employees.

Hughes Aircraft Company is owned by the Howard Hughes Medical Institute, a not-for-profit Delaware corporation headquartered in Miami, Florida.

The Fund's ability to continue and expand its programs is a direct result of the support it receives from companies like this. Not only do the students who receive scholarships benefit, but the entire program is strengthened.

DIRECTOR

"The Edison Fund has been my biggest commitment. I first became involved by recruiting students from across the country for its first Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems in 1969. I then helped put together its regional economics conferences at Vanderbilt, Rice, the University of Texas, DePauw and Claremont. We reached hundreds of additional student leaders through those.

"It has been deeply rewarding for me, especially when I see graduates of our programs in increasingly higher positions of responsibility, giving back to their country some of what it has given to them."

"It has been rewarding for me in a very personal way, too. I met my wife, Jessica, through the Fund. She attended the 1975 Institute and served for nearly four years as the director of its alumni association."

Randal Teague, 39, has been active in other Edison Fund activities as well. Until last year, the Washington attorney also edited "The Edison Report." He continues to serve as program director of our biennial Barry Goldwater Scholarship Awards Dinners, as well as a director on our board. He has been General Counsel since 1981.

A graduate of the American University and of George Washington University's National Law Center, he served with a Congressional committee in the Executive Office of the President of the United States, before becoming administrative assistant and legislative counsel to Representative Jack F. Kemp of New York. Randal joined the Cabot Corporation in Boston in 1978 and returned to Washington following President Reagan's 1980 election. He is presently with the Washington office of Vorys Sater Seymour and Pease, a Columbus and Cleveland, Ohio law firm.

Randal and Jessica live in Alexandria, Virginia in suburban Washington with their three children.

SCHOLAR

Lisa Myers attended the Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems in 1972 and The Fund's American Political Journalism Conference in New York City in 1973.

She received her B.A. degree in journalism from the University of Missouri at Columbia in 1973. Active in numerous organizations and activities, Lisa was the student representative of the University's Alumni Development Fund, Chairman of the legislative committee of the Student's Association, and member of the Student Court. She was named to the Dean's List, Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities, and held memberships in a number of honorary societies.

While attending the university, Lisa was a reporter and editorial writer for the Columbia Missourian. Following graduation, she joined the staff of the Washington Star where she worked until 1981 when she became a Washington correspondent for NBC News. Currently with NBC, Lisa now covers Capitol Hill. She has appeared on "Meet the Press," "Face the Nation," "Washington Week in Review" and Cable News Network's "Press Box."

Lisa has been of great help to The Edison Fund and the American Political Journalism Conference. She served as a speaker for each of The Fund's last three conferences in Washington, D.C. Asked to comment on the program, Lisa responds: "It's a great opportunity for a close-up look at journalism as practiced in the most competitive news town in the world. A chance to question some of the toughest questioners in the business and to hear from White House officials and others who aren't always pleased to be on the receiving end. I've participated as a student and as a speaker — both were educational and enjoyable."

The strong attachments that our students make to each other and to Georgetown while at the Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems bring them back to Washington year after year to share in the graduation of successive Institute classes. This year's graduation weekend, July 15-17, was exciting for all who participated. From Friday evening's Potomac boat cruise with over 150 alumni, graduates, parents, board members and guests to Saturday's gala post-graduation reception, alumni and the Class of '83 reminisced old times and shared ideas and aspirations.

The boat cruise was new to this year's reunion agenda, as was the Saturday morning debate held in conjunction with brunch. The debate featured Mr. Lee Atwater, Deputy Assistant to the President for Political Affairs, and Mr. Christopher J. Matthews, Administrative Assistant to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill. They discussed Reagan Administration policies and the likelihood of the President running again in 1984. Mr. Charles Black, of Black, Manafort & Stone, Inc. and member of the Board of Directors of the Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund, served as moderator. The speakers were extremely dynamic and all those present enjoyed a very enlightening and exciting program.

Saturday evening's graduation ceremony was special to many alumni in that the keynote speaker, Dr. Paul Craig Roberts, was the Economics Instructor at the 1972 Institute. Excerpts from his address are included in this issue (see page 4).

With Sunday morning and the end of the 14th annual Institute, alumni and a new class of Institute graduates returned to their native states to continue their work and educations. As shown on the above map, our alumni are involved in many different areas of the public and private sector across the country. Wherever they go, these former students have been enriched by the unique experience afforded them by the Institute. We are proud of the role that the Institute played in the development of their careers.

The Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund

The Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund was established in 1969 for the purpose of educating young American leaders in the concepts, principles, and institutions which have made the United States of America the strongest and most prosperous nation in the world. The Fund sponsors programs designed to prepare young leaders to make informed decisions that will contribute to the continued strength and progress of the country.

The idea was formed in 1967 when Charles Edison met with a group of individuals who wanted to strengthen support for the country's government and private enterprise system within the leadership circles of our society. That group included William F. Buckley, Jr., Dr. Walter Judd and David R. Jones. They saw the need for greater understanding of our free institutions within the halls of Congress, in the classrooms of our universities, in executive suites of our major businesses, and throughout our society.

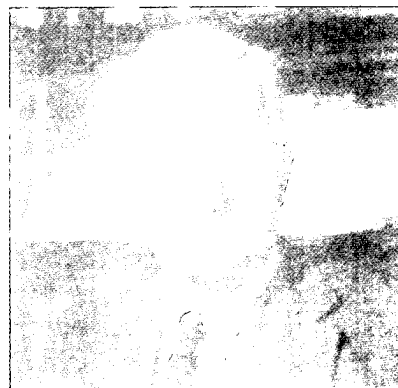

In particular, they determined to help restore the eroding confidence in basic American values by providing young campus leaders with the opportunity to gain a well-balanced perspective on how American economic and political systems compare with those in the rest of the world.

Mr. Edison proposed the creation of a fund which would develop programs to educate America's student leaders in the traditional principles that have helped to foster this nation's constitutional government and free enterprise economy, and he contributed a grant to aid in the planning of the fund.

On July 31, 1969, Governor Edison died suddenly without having seen his aspiration for American youth fulfilled. The response to his untimely passing was immediate. Close friends and associates moved quickly to honor him and his concern for America's future with the creation of the Fund. The Fund is not endowed.

Charles Edison was the son of the famous inventor, Thomas Alva Edison. He matched his father's tireless capacity for hard work, and exhibited at an early age remarkable talent for business management.

After attending the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Charles took over increasing responsibility for managing the Edison Industries. He attacked business problems with as much enthusiasm and creativity as his father dealt with technical ones. In 1926, at the age of 36, he became president of the company.

For the past fourteen years the Fund has worked with students to realize Governor Edison's purpose. A public, tax-exempt educational foundation, the Fund has gained a national reputation for academic excellence in its programming. It was the recipient of the Freedom Foundation's 1977 award for college campus programs.

Each summer the Fund sponsors the Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems at Georgetown University. This nationally recognized program has brought over a thousand student leaders to the nation's capitol for intensive six-week study-and-work sessions. The Institute has received the George Washington Honor Medal for its unequalled combination of morning course work, afternoon Congressional internships and evening lectures.

The Fund has sponsored eight national conferences on responsible journalism. They bring journalism students together to learn and to discuss the responsibilities of the news media in a free society. The most recent was this fall in Washington, D.C.

The Fund also sponsors economic education conferences on college campuses. Students from all fields of study meet with business leaders and academicians of balanced perspective at these two-day and three-day regional conferences. The most recent have been at Vanderbilt, Rice, and DePauw Universities, the University of Texas, and Claremont College.

Each summer the Fund sponsors the American Foreign Policy Forum for all interns in the Washington area. The Forum has featured outstanding lectures in national defense and foreign policy, including ambassadors from the Republic of China, Israel, Japan, Iran (1973), South Vietnam (1975) and Brazil, Admiral John McCain, Generals Daniel Graham and Robert Richardson and U.S. Permanent Representative to the U.N., Jeane J. Kirkpatrick.

In 1933, Mr. Edison was appointed State Director for New Jersey of the National Emergency Council. Then in 1937 he was made Assistant Secretary of the Navy, appointed to Secretary of the Navy in 1939. It was during these years that he became concerned about the growing power of the Federal Government, and began a lifelong commitment to reversing that trend. He said, "It takes courage to try new things, and it takes courage to stop them if they are not successful."

Elected Governor of New Jersey in 1940, he became a powerful force against corruption in government. At the conclusion of his term, Mr. Edison resumed direction of the Edison Industries until his retirement in 1961.

As Chairman of the Board, Charles Edison oversaw one of the most successful consolidations in the history of American business — the merger of the Edison Company with The McGraw Electric Company.

Charles Edison deeply believed in America's free institutions and in the young people who would someday assume their leadership. The Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund stands as more than a symbolic appreciation of that belief — it is an active commitment to its realization.

BARRY M. GOLDWATER SCHOLARSHIP AWARDS

The Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship Awards are administered by The Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund, a tax-exempt educational foundation to which contributions are tax-deductible.

This scholarship awards program has been established both to honor an effective and courageous man, whose character and vision have enhanced the American Dream, and to enable young leaders on our college campuses to appreciate more fully the uniqueness of the American political and economic systems and their responsibilities toward them.

The chairman of this scholarship awards program is Dr. Walter H. Judd, a former Member of Congress from Minnesota and the Honorary Chairman of the Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund.

CONCERT

By

MR. ROGER WILLIAMS

SENATOR JOHN WARNER was elected to the Senate in 1978. He had served previously as Secretary of the Navy and as the Administrator of the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration. He is chairman of the Senate's Subcommittee on Strategic and Theatre Nuclear Forces and the Subcommittee on Energy and Mineral Resources. He is an engineering graduate of Washington & Lee University and a graduate of the University of Virginia Law School.

MISS TINA A. BARSH is Data Systems Design Manager for Strategic Planning for AT&T Communications in Piscataway, N.J. A Goldwater Scholar at the 1976 Institute on Comparative Political and Economic Systems, she is a graduate of Albertus Magnus College in Connecticut and a master's candidate at Fairleigh Dickinson University in New Jersey. Her Institute internship in 1976 was at the White House.

SECRETARY MARK R. LEVIN is Deputy Assistant Secretary of Education for Elementary and Secondary Education. He is the youngest deputy assistant secretary in the Reagan Administration. Prior to joining the Administration in 1981, he served as Assistant Counsel to Texas Instruments, Inc., of Dallas. He is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Temple University and a graduate of its law school.

MR. DAVID R. JONES is president of The Charles Edison Memorial Youth Fund. He is also chairman of the National Commission on Student Financial Assistance, having been appointed to that position by President Reagan, and a member of the faculty at Vanderbilt University. He was formerly administrative assistant to Sen. James L. Buckley of New York.

SENATOR PAUL LAXALT won election to the Senate in 1974 against a national near-landslide for the Democratic party. He had formerly served as Lieutenant Governor and then Governor of Nevada when Ronald Reagan was Governor of neighboring California. He chaired both the 1976 and 1980 Reagan presidential campaigns. Since 1982, he has served as general chairman of the Republican National Committee.

SENATOR BARRY M. GOLDWATER was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1952, 1958, 1968, 1974, and 1980. He was his Party's nominee for President in 1964 and is today one of the principal influences within that Party. As chairman of the Senate's Committee on Intelligence and as Vice Chairman of its Committee on Armed Services, he is deeply involved in defense and foreign policy issues.

MR. ROGER WILLIAMS is one of America's most popular entertainers. A composer, arranger and performer of wide renown, his records have sold millions and his music has captured the hearts and minds of music enthusiasts worldwide. He holds degrees from Idaho State College (in engineering), Drake University (in arts), and the Juilliard School of Music (in honor of his contributions to music).
